Mobility The elderly with visual impairment run an increased risk of physical inactivity, [27] [28] slower speeds of the march, [29] [30] [31] and the fear of falls. [32] Physical activity is a useful predictor of general well-being, and routine physical activity reduces the risk of developing chronic diseases and disability. [33] [34] The older adults with visual impairment (including glaucoma, age-related macular degeneration and diabetic retinopathy) decreased physical activity, as measured with self-reports and accelerometers. [35] [36] The U.S. National Survey of Health and Nutrition Exams (NHANES) showed that people with corrected visual acuity less than 20/40 spent significantly less time in moderate to vigorous physical activity. [37] Age-related macular degeneration is also associated with a 50% decrease in physical activity- however, physical activity is protective against the progression of age-related macular degeneration. [38] [39] In terms of mobility, those with visual impairment have a slower pace of march than those with no visual impairment; However, the rate of decline remains proportional with the increase of age in the two groups. Other techniques used by blind people to help them in daily activities include: currency adaptations and notes, so that the value can be determined by touch. ^ Bat Man, Reader's Digest, June 2012, filed from the original on March 15, 2014, recovered on March 14, 2014 ^ Gregor, P., Newell, A.F., Zajicek, M. In 1934, the American Medical Association adopted the following definition of blindness: Central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye with corrective glasses or central visual acuity of more than 20/200 if there is a visual field defect in which the peripheral field is contracted to such an extent that the widest diameter of the visual field subtends an angular distance no greater than 20 degrees in the better eye.[20] The United States Congress included this definition as part of the Aid to the Blind program in the Social Security Act passed in 1935.[20][21] In 1972, the Aid to the Blind program and two others combined under Title XVI of the Social Security Act to form the Supplemental Security Income program[22] which states: An individual shall be considered to be blind for purposes of this title if he has central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye with the use of a correcting lens. In adults with low vision there is no conclusive evidence supporting one form of reading aid over another.[75] In several studies stand-mounted devices allowed faster reading than hand-held or portable optical aids.[75] While electronic aids may allow faster reading for individuals with low vision, portability, ease of use, and affordability must be considered for people.[75] Children with low vision sometimes have reading delays, but do benefit from phonics-based beginning reading instruction methods. The rest have some vision, from light perception alone to relatively good acuity. 29 (4): 661eÁÁA666.
